

Cutting Violence by Trimming Hair

by Amy Young
Published Feb 28, 2006

Cut the violence. Young people in Rochester heard the message Tuesday and then received a free hair cut in return.

Rochester firefighters and police officers talked to kids at city barbershops

Tuesday, sharing stories that hope to encourage them to stay off the streets and out of trouble. Inspired by an ex-convict who now owns his own barbershop, barber Phillip Sinclair decided to carry on the tradition.

"I wanted to aid in the effort to stop the violence in Rochester," he said. "There's been an amazing impact on youth today. Although there is violence, all around needs to be addressed. I just want to be a part of it."

After listening to the talk, the kids received a free clip.

© 2007 Time Warner Cable
Rochester, NY
All Rights Reserved